Senator Sam Brownback of Kansas was among the most conservative of the candidates seeking the 2008 Republican presidential nomination and continues to be a leading conservative voice in the United States Senate.

Senator Brownback's Catholic faith showed in many of the issues upon which he built his presidential campaign and senatorial career: respect for life and marriage, opposition to stem-cell research, the right to recognize God in America's classrooms. These positions helped to make Brownback the natural choice for traditionally-minded Catholics and other conservative Christians during the 2008 presidential nominating campaign. Senator Brownback continues to work for the causes he believes in, and these faithful donors continue to support him in his work.

These donors are proud of their beliefs and those who share them, and are eager to demonstrate their faith through the support of charitable works as well as political causes.
