These donors are aware of the dangers of out-of-control spending and believe that there are better ways to combat poverty than entitlement programs. They embrace the message of Star Parker and agree that a conservative agenda of traditional values, limited government, and private ownership is of greatest benefit to low income peoples. They are generous conservatives who are willing to help those who are less fortunate. CURE is devoted to protecting unborn life, traditional morals, capitalism, parental rights, and private property.

Since inception in 1995, CURE has become the leading Black conservative think tank in the country. It is devoted to improving the living conditions for thousands of inner city Americans.
